ONLINE EDUCATION INITIATIVE (OEI) AND ONLINE COMMUNITY COLLEGE ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Regarding the Course Design Rubric

- Online Course Design Academy: Information about the process of course review
- OEI Course Design Rubric: The standards used to review online courses for the Course Exchange and covers design, interaction and collaboration, assessment, learner support, and accessibility. The principles were derived from work done by @ONE, the CCC Distance Education Coordinator's group, the Academic Senate for California Community Colleges (ASCCC), and the CCC Chancellor's office (CCCCO) along with a variety of other local college and nationally established standards.
- Faculty Reflection video 1: experience of participating in course review
- Faculty Reflection video 2: experience of participating in course review
- Faculty Reflection video 3: experience of participating in course review
- Webinar regarding idea of building a local team to do these reviews

Regarding the Online Community College

- Online Community College District website
- Online Community College FAQs
- From FAQs (link above): How is the Online College different from the OEI? - The Online Education Initiative (OEI) is focused on traditional college students. OEI established a technological infrastructure to expand online offerings at all 114 community colleges, built services to support students taking online courses, and established a Course Exchange to allow students to seamlessly enroll in online courses within six currently participating colleges. In serving traditional students, OEI focuses on serving the transfer needs of students, such as building out the Associate Degree for Transfer pathways, as well as creating online classes for bottleneck gateway courses required to transfer. The new online college will offer programs for working adults who are not currently accessing higher education and need wage gain and promotional opportunities.